PUNJAB—THE GRANARY OF INDIA

The present state of PUNJAB which derives its name from the Land of Five Rivers (Sut, Beas, Ravi, Ghaggar, and Jhelum) of the pre-1947 undivided territory, is rightly termed as the undisputed cradle of Indian civilisation.

Situated in the north-west of India, along the International Border with Pakistan, Jammu and Kashmir and the Siwalik hills, Punjab is India's northern gateway and home of proud martial races who fought countless foreign invasions for centuries. Historians of the India Valley Civilization agree that Punjab is the cradle of one of the oldest cultures in India and that it is among the most developed civilisations. Archaeological excavations at some historic sites testify to the rich and colourful heritage of Punjab.

Punjab is basically an agrarian economy and is the heartland of the green revolution in India. The continuing progress of Punjab contributes more than 50% to the Central Pool and reflect the farmer's hard work, enterprise and fast adaptation of the modern technology. The state stands in the front ranks of industrial progress and its handicrafts, beautifully adapted to modern day requirements, furnish a treat for the eye. It is also famous for legendary surgery work, sports goods, brassware and number of other crafts.

Punjab offers the tourists a choice of religious shrines, ancient forts, lakes, dams, lush green and golden fields, spectacular festivals, diverse varied architecture, museums, zoos, with a backdrop of prospering and expanding cities.

As per 2011 census the population of Punjab is 271 million. It has extreme climatic conditions with temperature ranging from 2°C in winter to 42°C in summer. The average annual rainfall varies from 300 mm to 900 mm and most of the rainfall is during the monsoon from July to September.

Punjab is the home of lively and hospitable people. The bolshoiya Bhangra dance by men and Ghazals by women, have become very famous. The region is known for good food and sometimes old world charm with a sweep of contemporary new life.
